

Note to Authors and Readers

The Journal of Glass Studies was created in 1959 to serve as a vehicle for scholarship in the history, art, and technology of glass. The editors of the Journal seek previously unpublished articles of original research on topics related to the history of glass, from its beginnings to the mid-20th century, that would be of interest to an international audience of glass scholars. The Journal does not accept articles concerned with living artists or glassmakers.

The Journal publishes articles in English, German, French, Spanish, and Italian, up to 10,000 words in length (inclusive of footnotes and figure captions), and all articles must be accompanied by a 100- to 150-word abstract in English. Information of less than article length that may be of interest to the scholarly world of glass will be considered for publication in the “Notes” section; notes may be up to 1,700 words, inclusive of footnotes and figure captions. All such notes written in a language other than English must be accompanied by a 100- to 150-word abstract in English.

An honorarium of $250 will be paid for each article published in the Journal, and each author will receive one complimentary copy of the volume in which the article appears and a PDF file of the article. Contributors of scholarly notes will receive a complimentary copy of the Journal in which the note appears and a PDF file of the “Notes” section.

Submitting Articles and Notes

Manuscripts may be submitted by e-mail to publications@cmog.org or sent electronically, using one of various file transfer services (for example, Dropbox or the Web site wetransfer.com).

Manuscripts of articles and notes submitted to the editor will be reviewed and considered for publication in the order in which they are received. All articles are submitted for peer review by external Journal advisers or Corning Museum of Glass staff readers before acceptance for publication. A copy of the style rules for manuscripts submitted to the Journal will be sent to prospective contributors on request; manuscripts that do not conform to the style rules will be returned to authors for correction before acceptance.

The Journal staff normally restricts its editing to matters of clarity and correct usage once an article has been approved by the adviser or reader. An edited typescript and a layout are sent to the author for approval.

No article will be approved for publication until both its text and its illustrations have been reviewed. An article that is approved by an adviser or a reader may still be rejected if any of the illustrations are determined to be of unacceptable quality. The author will then be asked to supply images of acceptable quality or to eliminate any illustrations that do not meet the Journal's standard.

Images

High-resolution digital images must be no smaller than 4 x 5 inches, no less than 300 dpi, and saved in either TIF or JPEG format. Line drawings must be scanned at no less than 600 dpi. Digital images can be sent electronically by using one of the various file transfer services (see instructions for manuscript submission). Questions regarding images should be directed to jgsimages@cmog.org.

The Journal does not reimburse authors for any costs associated with the production or acquisition of images. Authors are also responsible for supplying—and for obtaining permission to reproduce—copyrighted materials.

Copyrights

Every author who submits an article or note to the Journal of Glass Studies must sign an agreement assigning copyright for this content to The Corning Museum of Glass. This agreement, which will take effect only when the submission is accepted for publication, protects the interests of the Museum and the author by specifying, for both parties, the rights related to the publication and reuse of the material. The agreement guarantees that the Museum has all necessary rights to reproduce and distribute the content throughout the world in any print or electronic medium.

By signing the agreement, an author (or the author's employer) certifies the following:

1. The work is original and has not been previously published.
2. The work does not infringe on anyone's copyright or other rights.
3. All necessary permissions, licenses, or clearances have been obtained for any material copyrighted/owned by another party, including illustrations, and these materials are clearly identified and acknowledged in the text.
4. The author owns the copyright of the article or note and is authorized to transfer it.

The author (or the author's employer) retains the following rights:

1. All proprietary rights other than copyright.
2. The right to make and distribute copies of the content for internal purposes.
3. The right to use the material for lecture or classroom purposes.
4. The right to make other print- and electronic-format publications based on the content, including books or book chapters, journal papers, and magazine articles, provided the new work appears after the publication of the volume of the Journal of Glass Studies in which the contribution appears.
5. The right to post an author-prepared or official version of the published work on a server controlled exclusively by the author/employer, under three stipulations:
 - a. The posting is noncommercial and is made available without charge.
 - b. A copyright notice and full citation appear with the post.
 - c. A link to the Corning Museum's official online version of the abstract is provided.

Manuscripts accepted by the Journal of Glass Studies, and all illustrations accompanying those manuscripts that are not already copyrighted by a third party, are copyrighted by The Corning Museum of Glass, and the Museum reserves the right to reproduce such materials in their entirety or in part in any future publication (printed, photographic, or electronic) issued by the Museum. This includes the entire Journal in full-text online databases.

Publication and Distribution

The Journal of Glass Studies is published annually. Each volume is announced on the Corning Museum of Glass (cmog.org) Web site; the table of contents and article abstracts are available on this Web site at the time of publication. Authors are responsible for printing and distributing the article or note to their photo sources.

Past volumes are available through subscription on JSTOR; currently, all volumes (1959–2017) are available. The Corning Museum of Glass releases new volumes to JSTOR one year after print publication and distribution.
